WHAT STUDENTS SAY

Ladislav Falbr
Empire State College, State University of New York

Studying issues of the international trade and development in Geneva with students from all around the world has been a great way to improve my academic knowledge but more importantly to expand my cultural communication with amazing individuals. The international character of the student body was incredibly diverse leading to me cooperating with students from Poland, Japan, the United States, Colombia, India, Italy and Norway. This definitely provided me with a different perspective on major international trade issues.

Gabriel Borda
Pontifícia Universidade Católica do
Rio de Janeiro (PUC-Rio)

During the programme we had different types of sessions: workshops, simulations, group discussions and and more classical lectures as well. We also had the opportunity to visit institutions like the Red Cross and the UNHCR, giving us a taste of the daily dynamics and challenges faced when working with international issues. The Institute is located just a few steps from the United Nations, and there are a lot of advantages on being surrounded by so many international agencies.
